

Nicole Kim

Law Practice

Nicole Kim is a land use, environmental, and real property law attorney with experience in both domestic and international legal matters. She represents clients in litigation in both state and federal courts and provides strategic counsel on regulatory and compliance issues, particularly those involving the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA), the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA), real property disputes, and administrative law.

Nicole brings a broad perspective to her practice, having worked in diverse legal settings across multiple jurisdictions. She is skilled in managing complex cases from inception through resolution, conducting detailed legal research, drafting persuasive pleadings, and advising clients on regulatory strategy. Her work emphasizes practical solutions that balance legal requirements with her clients' business and development goals.

Before joining Briscoe Prows Kao Ivester & Bazel LLP, Nicole gained international legal experience through an internship with the Council of Europe Venice Commission in France, where she contributed to constitutional law and governance research. She also worked with property law firms and in-house legal teams in South Korea, advising on real estate transactions and disputes.
